She first got connected to CLC Women club. She started participating in various educational as well as recreational activities. Gradually CLC volunteer identified her leadership talent and made her member of Mauli SHG. She took training on paper bags making. Today she is making 100 bags a day and supporting her family. Any fluctuation in rain affects the agricultural activities, production, and ultimately the income of the farmer. To reduce this dependency it was planned under HRDP that an irrigation facility will be provided to groups of farmers. NIWCYD provided lift irrigation, and shallow bore well to farmers so that they can overcome rain fluctuations, diversify crop patterns, and cultivate crops in other seasons than Kharif too.

2. Agriculture, and livelihood development

Farmer in the program area was still applying the traditional methods of cultivation, as a result, their production was less. NIWCYD promoted HYV seeds, modern methods of cultivation, diseases, and pest management. Paddy has achieved the status of cash crop here, and people are growing paddy in every possible place. NIWCYD worked with farmers to create diversification and promoted different crops such as wheat, mustard, black gram, maize, millets, etc. Along with these farmers were supported, and motivated to develop orchards of different fruit plants.

A7) Aligning Farming with Nature across Agri-ecologies, MP

Date of Starting	February, 2022 to June, 2023
Supporting Agency	SRIJAN (NCNF Coalition), New Delhi
Location of Project	Mehandwani & Karanjiya block of District Dindori
Coverage	500 Families in Two Blocks of 11 Villages

Objectives:

Reversing the ill-effects of the Green Revolution (GR) and regenerating and leveraging the power of natural system is a huge challenge. The project will take multiple steps in the following directions:

- progressive elimination of chemical pesticides and fertilizers, as also Genetically Modified Organisms (GMOs);
- promoting crop diversification and a decisive movement away from the monocultures of the GR;
- focus on productivity of the whole farm system, moving away from the commodity-centric approach of the GR;
- regenerating natural cycles and soil health to boost yields and pest management;
- reducing the demand for water for irrigation which has sky-rocketed after the GR

The aim is to activate the “soil food web”: plants exude enzymes which are the food for the soil microbes and as they multiply, their predators multiply, and the entire soil food web gets activated. This triggers exchange process between plants, soil microbes and soil nutrients. Thus, minerals that were otherwise ‘locked’ are made bio-available to plants. By stimulating this process, natural farming practices build soil humus and soil fertility on a continuous basis.

Case Study

Awareness and community mobilization – laid foundations for positive changes in village

The name of Yeotmal district counts first when we talk about drinking water crisis of Vidarbha. Continuous drought situation, errant rainfall has rendered a significant part of the district as severely drought prone.

When Women + Water project was started in the district, the primary focus was given community level sensitization on drought, various factors that contributing to its intensification, drinking water crisis, and sustainable solutions to maintain the quality of drinking water. Besides the sensitization, the institutional build up at grassroots level in which representation of beneficiary sections remains prominent was also targeted.

NIWCYD volunteers providing training for the community members on water quality testing

Yevti is a village selected as one of the target for implementation of W + W project, the village is 30 Kms away from Yeotmal town and NIWCYD is the first NGO entering in Yevti with a project. During the preliminary interventions, the project team found that the village had one common well as their drinking water source which was constructed by the government. Notwithstanding the fact that the well is hardly able to cater the drinking water need of the entire village population round the year, there was nothing appeared to have undertaken by the beneficiary communities to maintain the well, especially its hygienic surrounding, activities which has potential to contribute to the groundwater level and they were totally unaware about the technical aspects of drinking water security.

Sensitization campaign on BCC (behavioural changes at community level in various villages facilitated by W + W project volunteers

The project interventions focused on the community based behavioral change aspects, through different levels of sensitization activities like, theater performances, demonstrations, creative events for children and youth etc.

Technical knowledge and resources for the water quality testing by using (FTK) was provided to the community members and motivated them to volunteer for their benefit.

While the project is going and will complete its third year, NIWCYD has a number of things to learn along with various stakeholders, especially with beneficiary sections.

- Beneficiary participation is a key driving force behind the successful implementation and sustainability of any program designed based on their needs.
- Multi – stakeholder involvement in entire process of the project implementation, especially monitoring, evaluation, management of community assets will improve the qualitative aspects of the outcomes.

Among overall sensitization campaign, ecological education should be on the priority, so that the collective energy of the beneficiary community can be bring sustainable changes at grassroots level as a mitigation measure to the adverse impacts of climate change.
